Northborough-based WAC Consulting, Inc. Ramps up Hiring for 2007

Adds Jim Garrett and Veronica Kacerik to its staff

Northborough, January 26, 2007. WAC Consulting, Inc., an accounting and manufacturing software consulting firm servicing mid-size companies, has experienced a strong upswing in new business at the end of 2006, and is now gearing up for additional growth in 2007. The company announced today that it has hired two new staff members, Jim Garrett, sales consultant, and Veronica Kacerik, CPA and business analyst, to work with new clients in the area of accounting and operations consulting.

Jim joined WAC Consulting to lead the company's business development efforts. Bringing strong consultative and solution selling skills to WAC, Jim is working with new clients to identify their areas of operations to which a new business technology would bring significant bottom-line gains. Jim has a BS in Communications from Virginia's Liberty University and has also furthered his sales training through the Xerox professional selling skills seminar and Dale Carnegie sales seminar. Prior to joining WAC, Jim held account management positions with a number of communications companies. He then joined Integrated Computer Solutions in 1997, bringing application development tools to businesses in the financial, education and government industries. He most recently managed the New England sales for The Berry Company, where he introduced web-based marketing solutions to small and medium-size businesses. His experience lends itself to the core expertise at WAC Consulting, which is to help solve customer problems.

Veronica is a CPA who joined WAC in order to put her accounting and financial expertise in play with local businesses seeking to improve their financial health. She brings strong analytical skills to the company, having previously worked as an auditor with Phoenix Home Life Mutual Insurance Company, RHI Management Resources and the U.S. Office of Personnel Management, Office of the Inspector General. Veronica holds a BA in Accounting from the University of Maryland, and has been certified as an Oracle 10g database administrator at Clark University. Her strong accounting and technical background gives her the tools to work with WAC clients to help analyze their financial operations and recommend business technologies that will drive greater profitability.
